WELCOME TO METRO.US

NIKKI M. MASCALI, REPORTER

I'm deathly afraid of heights, to the point where my knees get wobbly and I may, on occasion, black out. So what the heck was I doing in a hard hat and safety vest 934 feet above the city on Friday? Tagging along on an exclusive tour of 3 World Trade Center, which is set to open in June, because if anything can make me overcome my fear, it's my love of looking at the city I've adored since age 10. Get a sneak peek into 3WTC on page 4 and see even more at metro.us.

REPUBLICANS TO TRUMP: LET MUELLER DO HIS JOB

1 GOP senators warned President Donald Trump on Sunday not to fire special counsel Robert Mueller, and said the president must let federal investigators looking into Russian meddling in the U.S. election do their jobs. The president renewed his Twitter attacks on the FBI and Mueller's probe since the firing on Friday of the bureau's former deputy director, Andrew McCabe, two days before he was eligible to retire with a full pension. Republican Sen. Jeff Flake, who has criticized Trump, said the president's comments appeared to be aimed at Mueller. Sen. Lindsey Graham said if Trump were to dismiss Mueller it would mark "the beginning of the end of his presidency." AshLee Strong, a spokeswoman for House Speaker Paul Ryan, said: "As the speaker has always said, Mr. Mueller and his team should be able to do their job." Read more on page 15.

TRUMP PLAN SEEKS DEATH PENALTY FOR DRUGS

2 President Donald Trump will unveil a plan on Monday to combat the opioid addiction crisis that includes seeking the death penalty for drug dealers and urging Congress to toughen sentencing laws for drug traffickers, White House officials said on Sunday. The White House plan will also seek to cut opioid prescriptions by a third over the next three years by promoting practices that reduce overprescription of opioids in federal healthcare programs, officials told a news briefing. Trump will outline his proposals at an event in New Hampshire. "The Department of Justice will seek the death penalty against drug traffickers when it's appropriate under current law," said Andrew Bremberg, director of Trump's Domestic Policy Council, in the briefing detailing the plan.

PUTIN WINS ANOTHER SIX YEARS AT RUSSIA'S HELM

4 Russian President Vladimir Putin won a landslide re-election victory on Sunday, extending his rule over the world's largest country for another six years at a time when his ties with the West are on a hostile trajectory. Putin's victory will extend his total time in office to nearly a quarter of a century, until 2024, by which time he will be 71. Only Soviet dictator Josef Stalin ruled for longer. Putin has promised to use his new term to beef up Russia's defenses against the West and to raise living standards. In a widely expected outcome, an exit poll by pollster VTsIOM showed Putin, who has dominated the political landscape for the last 18 years, had won 73.9 percent of the vote. His nearest challenger, Communist Party candidate Pavel Grudinin, got just over 11 percent, according to exit polls.

CONGRESS AIMS TO END SHUTDOWN SQUABBLES

5 Congress, facing yet another government shutdown deadline at midnight on Friday this week, will try to approve a massive spending bill that would end lawmakers' nettlesome budget infighting, at least through Sept. 30. Republican leaders in the House hope to soon unveil the product of long negotiations over a $1 trillion spending bill. It would fund all of the federal government's activities, except for the gigantic "mandatory entitlement" programs such as Social Security and Medicare, which do not have to be renewed annually. The Congress was supposed to have completed this work by Sept. 30, 2017, but it has not done that. Instead, the government has been running on a series of short-term, stopgap funding measures. As of Sunday, negotiators were still trying to put the finishing touches on the longer-term bill.

STOP TURKEY
SAVE CIVILIANS IN AFRIN!

- For nearly two months, Turkey has worked with jihadist groups linked to Al Qaeda to invade the peaceful Syrian Kurdish region of Afrin.
- Over 200 civilians have been killed, including many women and children.
- Forces affiliated with the operation have targeted civilians, used chemical weapons, taken hostages, stolen property, and destroyed critical civilian infrastructure- all war crimes.
- Now, the Turkish Army is at the gates of the city. Civilians trapped inside face airstrikes, limited food and water, and dwindling medical supplies.
- Erdogan has threatened to replace secular and pluralistic Afrin's diverse Kurdish, Arab, Alevi and Yazidi communities with refugees from other parts of Syria and Islamist rebels. This is ethnic cleansing, plain and simple.

Go inside 3 World Trade Center months before it opens

3WTC doesn't open until June, but see what's happening behind the gleaming blue glass building that's been 10-plus years in the making.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
nikki.mascali@metro.us

When Michael Young was a child, his father would take him and his older brother to his office in the North Tower of the original World Trade Center.

"That's where some of my earliest memories of New York City were, and that's what inspired me to go into architecture," the 24-year-old from Old Bridge, New Jersey, said.

That lifelong WTC passion paid off Friday when Young was able to get a sneak peek tour of 3WTC, slated to open in June, after he won a Facebook photo contest held in celebration of the main WTC page reaching one million followers and becoming the most-followed building in the city.

"We thought it would be fun to offer a young photographer a behind-the-scenes tour so they can see not just the glass façade, but what's happening behind," said Dara McQuillan of Silverstein Properties, developer of 3WTC.

"I was pretty surprised and happy," Young told Metro, which tagged along on his exclusive tour. "This was my chance to add to the history of the World Trade Center, and what better way to show them how much I love them than through photography, which is another way of how I express my creativity?"

A sneak peek inside 3 World Trade Center

After we were led through the fence surrounding the site, we entered the 64-foot-high lobby, one of the tallest in the city, which will feature walls made of Zimbabwe black granite, floors of Sardinian gray granite, LED lighting panels and exposed escalators. The latter is a trademark of architect Richard Rogers, one that is also seen in the ladder-like bracing on the building's exterior.

"When you come into the lobby of the building, you can see the nuts and bolts and how things work. It's hypnotic," said McQuillan.

We then visited the first of three terraces at 3WTC, 205 feet above street level on the 17th floor. Then we were whisked up to the second terrace on the 60th floor before seeing even more breathtaking views of the city and beyond from 934 feet up on the 76th floor.

The interior spaces on the terrace floors are vast, undeveloped spaces with floor-to-ceiling windows that offer unobstructed views from every angle due to 3WTC's column-free design.

When asked about his favorite part of the tour, Young said, "Looking down and seeing Oculus, that's probably one of the most amazing views I've ever seen, and to see the architecture of the beams was really mind-blowing for me."

The vast office spaces inside 3WTC offer unobstructed views thanks to floor-to-ceiling windows and a column-free design. ABOVE PHOTOS: NIKKI M. MASCALI

A new StreetEasy study found that the city's peak home-buying season comes twice a year — and one of them is just around the corner. PIXABAY

Here's the best time to buy that NYC apartment

If you're ready to switch from being a renter to a homeowner in New York City, one of the best times of year to make that leap is right around the corner, according to a new report from StreetEasy.

The study, which looked at how inventory, price cuts, the StreetEasy Price Index and time homes are on the market varies throughout the year, found that peak home-buying season when buyers will see more choices, more discounts and lower prices, comes twice a year: in the spring and fall.

"Ultimately, the best time to buy is a highly personal decision, and buyers are encouraged to look for homes at any time that is right for them," Nancy Wu, an economic data analyst at StreetEasy, wrote in the study. "However, those who can choose may have a higher likelihood of finding a good deal on their dream home in the spring and the fall, when the housing market offers the most choices and the steepest discounts."

The most selection is found between April and June, but inventory increases again in October, before dipping back down in the winter months.

In addition to having more homes to choose from, potential buyers will also see more discounts during the peak buying seasons. In fact, the study found that homes are 10 to 20 percent more likely to receive price cuts between April and June.

Those discounts are not as prominent during the rest of the summer months, but they become 20 percent more likely come September and October, when homeowners are looking to sell before the holidays.

While renters on the hunt for new digs may see price cuts when there is a lower rental inventory because owners want to get stale listings off the market, that's often not the case during peak buying seasons.

"Discounts are more common during the busier season, suggesting that there may be a surplus of homes and that sellers could be using discounts to attract buyers' attention," Wu wrote.

The length of time a home stays on the market also fluctuates by season, the StreetEasy study found. Last year, city homes spent an average of 70 days on the market, but in the springtime, that number dips 20 percent below the average. Between April and June, homes are on the market for 10 to 15 fewer days compared to the rest of the year, save for October, when homes come off the market a week faster.

GOP lawmakers alarmed by Facebook privacy concerns

Facebook faces new calls for regulation and was hit with questions about personal data safeguards.

Facebook is now facing criticism over how it protects users' privacy. GETTY IMAGES

Several Republican lawmakers expressed concern over privacy violations on Sunday after media reports that a political consultancy that worked on President Donald Trump's campaign gained inappropriate access to 50 million Facebook users' data.

Republican Sen. Marco Rubio said he believed some internet companies have grown too fast to digest their responsibilities and obligations.

"So we'll learn more about this in the days to come. But yeah I'm disturbed by that," Rubio told NBC's "Meet the Press."

Sen. Rand Paul was asked whether people can trust companies like Facebook in the wake of the report about Cambridge Analytica taking data.

"People have to look into it. Whether or not it broke the law, absolutely, the privacy of the American consumer, the American individual, should be protected," Paul said on CNN.

Facebook disclosed the issue in a blog post on Friday, hours before media reports that conservative-leaning Cambridge Analytica, a data company known for its work on Trump's 2016 presidential campaign, was given access to the data and may not have deleted it.

Facebook said in a statement that a Cambridge University psychology professor had lied to the company and violated its policies by passing data to Cambridge Analytica from an app he had developed. It suspended the firm from Facebook.

Facebook did not immediately reply when asked on Sunday for a response to the lawmakers' comments. However, in a new statement Sunday, the company said it was conducting a "comprehensive internal and external review" to determine if the user data in question still existed.

Cambridge Analytica and the professor have denied violating Facebook's terms, according to media reports. REUTERS

At 55, 'French Spiderman' keeps climbing world's tallest skyscrapers

Alain Robert often climbs without permission and has been arrested several times. GETTY IMAGES

"For me, climbing is a passion, it's a way of life," said the fearless climber.

Alain Robert, sometimes known as the "French Spiderman" for climbing skyscrapers world worldwide, is still defying gravity at the age of 55.

He scaled the summit of the fourth-tallest building in Paris' modern business district on Wednesday after evading security officers who had thwarted an earlier attempt.

A hobby that started at 11 years old has taken Robert to more than 150 skyscrapers around the world, including Dubai's Burj Khalifa, the world's tallest building, the Eiffel Tower, and the Sydney Opera House.

"For me, climbing is a passion, it's a way of life," he said.

It took Robert just over an hour to scale to the top of the 614-feet high Tour Total, which houses some of the offices of the French energy group of the same name.

He has accomplished the feat twice in the past.

Using only climbing shoes and chalk, he clung to the window ledges to lift himself up past the tower's 48 floors, cheered on by office workers-turned-spectators in La Defense.

Robert had first tried to climb the Engie building on Wednesday morning, but security guards quickly came to remove him.

He often climbs without permission and has been arrested several times. In 2008, he scaled the New York Times building to unfurl a banner on global warming, and was arrested by police.

Robert sees no end in sight for his vertiginous adventures.

"As long as I have the physical strength to scale heights, I will continue to climb," he said. REUTERS

Migraine Sufferers - Are you sick of he

Finally - A Doctor Who Und

What Every Migraine & Headache Suff

Caring Approach

New York City -

There is no doubt.

Migraines and other types of severe headaches are one of the most painful conditions you can ever suffer from.

If not the most painful.

In fact, the majority of female migraine headache sufferers we treat say it's worse than child birth.

Much Worse

And the most frustrating part is… unless someone has this crippling condition… they simply cannot understand what you are going through.

No matter how much they say…. "I know how you feel"… they just don't.

You know what I mean... right?

This includes doctors

It's so disheartening how uncaring some doctors can seem simply because they just don't understand how bad the pain is.

And how devastating this condition is to your life.

So let me ask you this...

How frustrating... even infuriating is that?

Seriously... that should never happen.

Is it because they don't care... or... maybe they have just become desensitized because they are around this horrible condition so much.

Who knows.

Here is something I do know:

While Dr. Sorokin, MD does not suffer from migraine or severe headaches himself… he has treated hundreds of patients with the condition.

And even though he has gotten excellent results with so many… what he is most proud of is how each and every patient knows how much he cares about them and will always puts their needs first doing what's best for them.

Here is something you must know before we go any further…

There is no cure for migraine headaches.

Sure… there are a ton of "wonder cures" out there.

Theses overnight miracles are often being sold by unethical marketers praying on the fact that you are in severe pain… and so desperate you are willing to try almost anything.

Shame on these people

The truth of the matter is…

There are no 100% success rates for anything in medicine. This is because every patients is individual… so every case is individual and unique.

Therefore, no ethical doctor would eve guarantee you results.

Or even promise you any particular result what-so-ever.

If you are looking for a miracle overnight cure… this is NOT for you.

But if you are looking for real medical treatments performed by qualified doctors that have a good chance to help you… this will be the most important information you ever discover.

Here is why:

After treating hundreds of migraine headache sufferers… NYC Pain MD and Dr. Sorokin have put together a treatment system that has had tremendous success for many.

One of the biggest reasons is because Dr. Sorokin uses advanced medical treatments customized to each patient often in combination. There is no standardized program as each case is unique.

We will tell you more about how these treatments can help you in just a moment… but first you should know this…

While NYC Pain MD And Dr. Sorokin cannot promise this program will not work for you… if if does… it can relieve some or much of your pain.

Imagine how wonderful to finally relieve some or possibly most of the throbbing, pulsating pain. Or due away with some of the sensitivity to light, nausea, vomiting. The dull ache or neck pain and fatigue that 'hangs over' after the headache.

How would it feel to finally be able to sleep all night without the pain? Or awaken without the fear of another headache ruining your day.

And do all the things you want and love to do again... without the pain.

Sounds to good to be true?

I'm sure it does.

I'm also sure you have heard big promises only to be let down before.

That's why we are not asking you to believe us right now.

We're only asking you to give us the opportunity to show you exactly what we can possibly do for you.

And then you can make an educated decision.

That's why NYC Pain MD and Dr. Sorokin are offering a free screening that gives you all the information you need to now about these advanced medical treatments for migraine and severe headaches… and their complete treatment program.

Your free screening will also give you the opportunity to discuss your case with Dr. Sorokin… and see if you qualify for treatment.

This is a great opportunity to get all your questions answered and find out what your best options are.

All you have to do is call 800-986-4868 and tell whoever answers the phone you want your free migraine screening. They will know what this is all about and get you scheduled for the next spot that fits into your schedule.

If you are on the fence please consider this:

This screening is completely free with no obligation.

You will not be getting a "sales pitch."

You will simply be getting great information on some of the best possible medical treatments for migraine headaches and the opportunity to see if you quality for any of them.

And if we can't help you... we will tell you and give a recommendation as to what we think you should do next.

The down side is ZERO

You have nothing to lose. What you stand to gain is a chance to finally relieve your migraine pain and get your life back.

As soon as you call and schedule your free screening you will breathe a big sigh of relief knowing you are doing everything you can and giving yourself the best possible chance to beat this brutal condition that has stolen your life.

Why You Should Do This Now

As you can imagine, these screenings fill up fast. If you do not call in time to get one this month, you will have to wait and be scheduled for the first available time next month. But we will do our best to get you in as soon as possible.

Who Should Try This Treatment?

Not everyone is a candidate for these programs.. But if you your are, there is a good chance you may relieve some... or much of your pain.

You are a potential candidate for one of our treatments if you have been diagnosed with migraine headaches and have symptoms like severe throbbing or pulsing pain... especially on one side of your head. A Massachusetts dispensary is trying new things with cannabis-infused products. FLICKR CREATIVE COMMONS

Medical marijuana dispensary creates new THC lip balm

This is just another advancement in the world of "marijuana as medicine," said Ermont Director of Operations Seth Yaffe.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Cannabis connoisseurs are doing more with marijuana than ever, creating all sorts of edibles, tinctures and topicals. Now, a Massachusetts dispensary has developed a THC-infused lip balm.

Ermont Inc., a medical marijuana dispensary in Quincy, Massachusetts, and the mastermind behind the marijuana-infused frozen pizza, recently unveiled its latest creation: a medicated lip balm made with coconut oil, beeswax, shea butter, eucalyptus and lemon oil and 5 milligrams of THC.

"Rather than smoking something or eating an edible, the aspect of using a topical is something we've been pushing the boundaries on," said Seth Yaffe, director of operations at Ermont.

"We came up with the idea [because] it's cold, a lot of people are going skiing or snowboarding, and there's a lot of chapped lips," he said. "And we wanted to do an extremely low-dosage topical so that people can use it throughout the day."

Tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, is just one chemical (or cannabinoid) within the cannabis plant. THC is the highest psychoactive found in cannabis, Yaffe said, but the low dose in this lip balm wouldn't bring on any psychoactive effects.

Instead, it will help with anxiety, pain relief, inflammation, healing wounds and dryness, he said.

"People can carry it around and not worry about overmedicating or being zoned out of it they usually feel that way from THC," he added. Plus, for those want to be a bit more discreet in their medical marijuana usage, lip balm is an easy answer.

Future versions of this product will also include cannabis terpenes — the essential oils of the cannabis plant that give a specific strain its smell, taste and particular effects.

By adding those in, Ermont can make "strain-specific lip balms," Yaffe said.

> "We're able to really figure out different ways our body can consume natural medicine."
> Seth Yaffe, director of operations at Ermont Inc.

Yaffe believes Ermont is the first dispensary in Massachusetts to develop THC lip balm, and even he's a bit surprised by the advancement. To him, it shows an industry that is making advancements and changing things for those who use medical marijuana.

"For us, the most important thing is the relationship we have with our patients. Sometimes we see 200 to 400 patients a day," he said. "We try to elicit a lot of feedback and get a better idea of what people are looking for, how to consume cannabis throughout the course of their life that makes it easier and less clinical."

"Instead of popping a pill or drinking an elixir or something like that," he added, "we're able to really figure out different ways our body can consume natural medicine."

TRUMP'S AMERICA

LOOK WHO'S NEXT ON THE WHITE HOUSE FIRING LINE

Special counsel Robert Mueller might be next on the president's "to fire" list. GETTY IMAGES

ELLIS HENICAN

Analysis

Ready, aim … fire Robert Mueller!

Isn't that where Donald Trump is heading next? He's sending out some dire signals, that's for sure.

In a barrage of increasingly furious weekend tweets, the angry president complained with fresh bitterness about the terrible unfairness of the special counsel investigation that's closing in on him: "The Mueller probe should never have been started … no collusion … no crime … Fake Dossier … Crooked Hillary and the DNC … WITCH HUNT! … lying James Comey … 13 hardened Democrats, some big Crooked Hillary supporters, and zero Republicans. … And yet, there is NO COLLUSION!"

"If [Trump tried to fire Mueller], it would be the beginning of the end of his presidency."

Sen. Lindsey Graham

If Twitter had its own greatest hits albums, that right there would be the one for @realDonaldTrump.

After tweet-firing Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and then further sliming the FBI's freshly fired Andrew McCabe, the president is now explicitly targeting the biggest threat of all. A Mueller whacking feels so imminent, even pro-Trump Sen. Lindsey Graham felt duty-bound to speak up on Sunday. "As I've said before," the South Carolina Republican told CNN's Jake Tapper, "if he tried to do that, it would be the beginning of the end of his presidency."

A clear warning, this is called.

When it comes to Trump administration firings, it's never the ones who deserve it most. This White House, loaded as it is with lightweights and sycophants, is certainly a target-rich environment: Princess Ivanka. Her know-it-all husband, Jared. Clueless cabinet secretaries like Betsy DeVos (sec. of charter schools), Ben Carson (sec. of privatizing public housing), Scott Pruitt (sec. of environmental degradation) and Rick Perry (sec. of giving the energy companies whatever they want).

Why not fire some of them?

Instead, it's the relative grown-ups who find themselves on the shakiest ground — a roster that now includes chief of staff John Kelly, national security adviser H.R. McMaster and Attorney General Jeff Sessions.

Don't bet on their futures, either.

Who exactly was 'Arthur Miller: Writer'?

His daughter Rebecca reveals all in a new documentary, airing tonight on HBO.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Arthur Miller wrote "The Crucible" and "The Death of a Salesman" ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Arthur Miller is one of the greatest playwrights of the 20th century. But according to his daughter, Rebecca Miller, there was a side to the writer of "Death of a Salesman," "The Crucible" and "A View from the Bridge" that the public never saw.

That's exactly what she wants to present to the world with her HBO documentary "Arthur Miller: Writer." Metro recently spoke with Miller and discussed her legendary father.

When did you start filming your dad?
I originally was [just] shooting randomly. Then in about 1995 I decided to make it into a film. I wanted to get my father as he was. I knew that no one else could get that close to my father. I just felt that he was so different in his public persona in interviews than the man I knew.

I was harvesting scenes and information and stories he told that I loved. My first impulse was to capture his personality, and then it became about doing something more serious.

How was he different?
He was much more guarded. And a little bit defensive. He was just very dour [compared] to the person I knew. He would make occasional jokes on camera, but he was always very funny and aloof, and very unjudgemental. None of those things seemed to come through, and I wanted to show him in that different way.

Did your dad talk about his past successes as a playwright, or focus on the future?
He was certainly happy that he had written his past plays, but he was writing for the future. And he was writing like a younger man in some ways. His later work is very free and experimental — not that his first plays weren't. But it was tough because he was up against himself.

Your dad died in 2005. Did you need this time, emotionally, before you could return to the material?
I left it for years and then I went back to it when it felt like it was a boil on my back that I really had to lance off. I needed some perspective. I couldn't have finished this film when he was alive. It would have been too early, and I just wouldn't have been free.

What was something that you learned about your dad in this process?
When you do something like this with your parents, you see different elements to their personality. I saw more vulnerability and how wide open he was, and even his romance, all of which I never saw.

I also saw a tremendous amount of self-confidence that he had. By the end of his life he was much humbler. He was still fascinated and very much in love with human beings. But there's not that sense that he has to teach them — he's just bemused them.

"Arthur Miller: Writer" will air on HBO on Monday at 8 p.m.

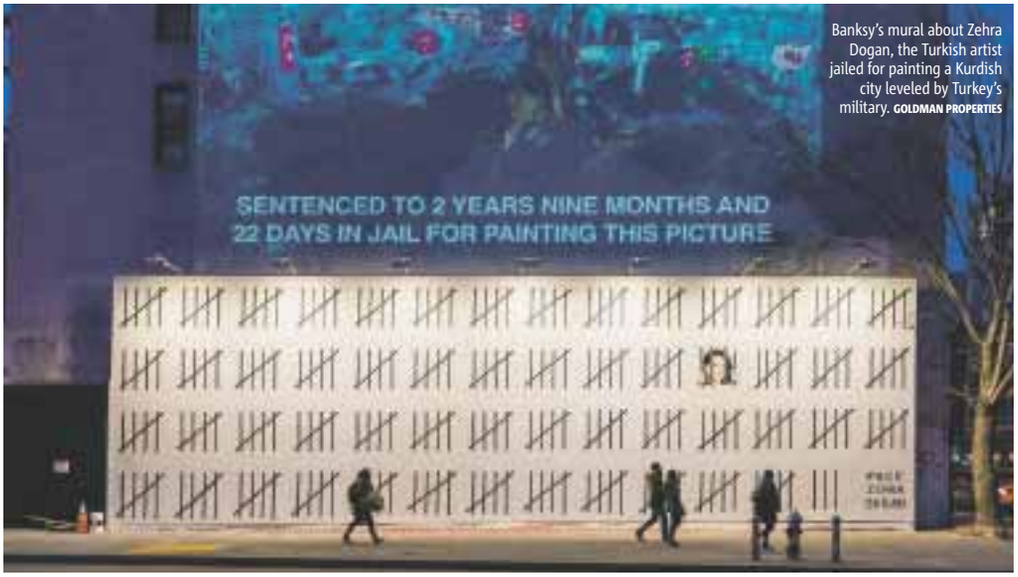
Banksy's back!

Here's where to find the latest NYC works by the famed anonymous graffiti artist.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us



Banksy's mural about Zehra Dogan, the Turkish artist jailed for painting a Kurdish city leveled by Turkey's military. GOLDMAN PROPERTIES

A rat doesn't attract attention from New Yorkers — that's, of course, unless it's a Banksy.

The new work at 14th Street and Sixth Avenue on the facade of an old bank slated for demolition has been confirmed legit on the impressively still anonymous artist's Instagram.

Now that we know the piece is really a Banksy, what's it mean?

The obvious reference is to the rat race of life in New York City, where we all have to run in place just to survive.

Or does the rat represent the city itself, put on a clock as a statement about how time is running out for the five boroughs as we face serious problems, both long-term — rising sea levels because of climate change — and short-term (like the MTA's failure to make the subways run properly).

Or is it merely a lament for the New York City rat, the truest New Yorker (save, perhaps, the pigeon) that is nonetheless maligned by its human colonizers?

While you parse that, Banksy also took credit for a mural that went up on the Houston Bowery Wall that's much more direct.

The work, painted on the same wall that Keith Haring made famous in 1982 at the corner of Houston and Bowery streets in the Lower East Side, depicts a prison wall with tally marks and the face of Turkish artist Zehra Dogan. She was arrested for painting a watercolor of the Kurdish town of Nusyabin after it was bombed by Turkey as part of its decades-long campaign to suppress Kurdish calls for an independent Kurdistan.

Dogan is drawn behind bars, with the final bar changed into a pencil, with the words "Free Zehra Dogan" at the bottom. Banksy's work is timed to coincide with the first year of her prison term; two years, nine months and 22 days.

Could these works be part of another residency like in 2013, when Banksy spent the entire month of October sprinkling works around the boroughs every single day?

We don't know yet, but New York is officially back on Banksy Watch. And you better be looking at more than just walls.

As part of the artist's residency five years ago, he set up a table among the many artists on the tourist-heavy stretch of Fifth Avenue from the southeast corner of Central Park to the Met Museum.

The salesman — or even Banksy himself, who knows! — sold paintings for as little as $30, thanks to one woman's ruthless haggling. Just six works found buyers after four hours for a total of $420. The Guardian estimated the works to actually be worth $195,000.

In another instance, a painting Banksy hijacked, then re-gifted with his own modifications to the charity organization Housing Works ended up selling for $615,000. Constant vigilance, people!

Welcome back, Banksy. The city is more exciting with you in it.

How do you make the perfect hamburger?
We weigh in on each element.

LESS IS MORE

Want to add ingredients like lettuce and onion? Go for it — but remember that less is more. You don't want to distract from the meat.

BREAD

Rookie mistake? Grabbing straight from the bun bag. Instead lightly butter and toast on the inner-facing sides of the bread.

CHEESE

Traditionalists tend to opt for American, cheddar or Swiss. Seventy-five percent of chefs surveyed say cheese goes directly under the hamburger patty.

SAUCE

Try making your own: Fry two garlic cloves in a little oil, add tomato paste and a little water. Reduce the sauce for a few minutes and add ½ tablespoon of paprika, 1 tablespoon of sugar, 2 tablespoons of apple cider vinegar and salt and pepper to taste. Take that, Heinz!

HAMBURGER

Use ground meat that's 80/20 when it comes to fat content. You might feel better ordering the leaner stuff, but this is a cheat day sort of sandwich. Any leaner and you'll be stuck with a dry bit of 'burg.

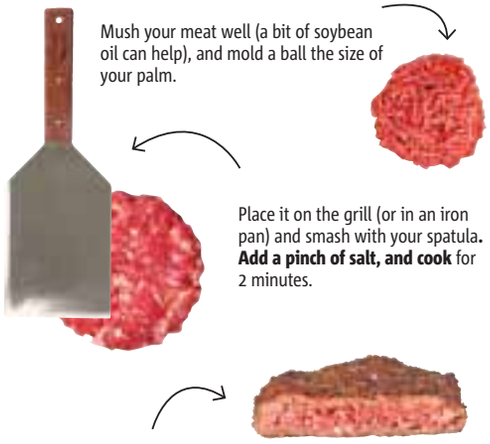
PREPARATION METHOD



Mush your meat well (a bit of soybean oil can help), and mold a ball the size of your palm.

Place it on the grill (or in an iron pan) and smash with your spatula. Add a pinch of salt, and cook for 2 minutes.

Flip the burger and wait two minutes for medium. Don't flip it again — one and (well?) done.

Add your queso as soon as you've made your flip. Insider tip? Spritz with a little bit of water and watch your cheese bubble.

Ready! Condiment time will be dictated by both personal preference as well as your choice of cheese (strong cheeses mean fewer add-ons).

"Smash!" signs George Motz when autographing his book. Considered one of the biggest hamburger experts in the world by "The New York Times," he is the author of "The Great American Burger Book: How to Make Authentic Regional Hamburgers at Home."

The "king of hamburgers" is an advocate of the traditional recipe and claims to have eaten more than 10 thousand of them for his book's research.

Motz starts his classic burger by making a ball of raw ground beef without seasoning. The sphere goes on to the plate in this format, where it receives a little salt. Next, "smash"! The cook uses his spatula to crush the ball of meat and transform it into the special attraction. A bit of time (to taste) on one side, then some more on the other, finely sliced onion on top, cheese at the last moment of cooking, pickles and other condiments on a lightly toasted bun, and you're good to go.

The preparation is fast and takes on the "less is more" style.

"The hamburger should fit in your hand and be easy to bite into. If you need cutlery to eat it, it's not a hamburger," says Motz.

Contentious! No seasoning? No mention of bacon or BBQ sauce, let alone aioli mayo? Motz insists that the purist version is the sandwich at its prime.

That said, in his book Motz gets into every region's signature sandwich. He includes recipes specific to almost every state, so you'll be able to cater to the most specific, die-hard out-of-towner.

And even if you aren't catering for a crowd, "The Great American Burger Book" makes for an interesting read, if only to learn the subtle differences between burgers of the Northeast.

Q&A

journalist and specialist on hamburgers

What's the perfect hamburger?
It is made simply, with fresh meat. The burger is going to be good if you can taste the meat. The other accompaniments are not important. You can put greens, vegetables and cheese on it, it's really all about the the meat.

Thoughts on fast-food burgers?
I grew up eating those things, but now I know better. Chains are large, and it's impossible to maintain quality. The ingredients aren't fresh. Thankfully local specialists are around to raise the bar, and keep up tradition.

Find the right job search site for you

It makes sense that if one job's best done in flip-flops and another requires heavy boots you'll find them in different places. ALL IMAGES ISTOCK

Refine your searches online to help you save time and find the job you ACTUALLY want.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Job search sites can be extremely helpful when looking for work. But often it feels like you're sending your resume out into an endless void, where responses from employers never make their way back to you.

While go-to's like LinkedIn, indeed, and — let's face it — Craigslist can yield the occasional lead, sometimes narrowing your searches to more specific sites is the best approach to finding worthwhile positions in your particular field. It only stands to reason that a bartender and a banker look in different places.

So stop wasting everyone's time — especially your own — and do some thinking before you search.

The service industry

While the best approach to finding work in a bar or restaurant is always going to be to meet the manager in person when you drop off a resume, it's unrealistic to think you can hand stop by dozens of places all over town in one day. Time is money, and you need to be making tips. So how can you narrow things down and find out who is looking for what at any given time?

PoachedJobs.com is a great resource. Just like a LinkedIn, Poached Jobs narrows searches to the very position you're after (and let's face it, a potential line cook is not potential waitstaff, and a head chef's got to look to a different place than, say, a beverage sales rep). At the very least you can refine the 'hood your looking in to make a better use of your time when it does come to pounding the pavement.

Freelance writing

As writers and journalists know, getting that first "in" is really the hardest step. Building up your portfolio with clips is a giant mountain you'll have to climb before landing a stable full-time — or part-time — position at a "real deal" publication. Most of the time, you have to log long hours by writing pieces for little or no money, all for the sake of building up experience.

That's where sites like Problogger.com and TheWriteLife.com come in. Both cater towards aspiring journalists or full-time freelancers looking for paid gigs. Most of the postings are for one-off pieces, but many publications offer part-time write-for-cash gigs that can last for months. And in the journalism world, sometimes that's the best you could ask for.

You might also consider searching within a creative staffing agency's listings. Big ones like CreativeCircle.com

have listings all over the country, and in addition to scribes are always looking for design types as well as tech heads.

Handy work

If building things and handiwork are skills you've got in your tool belt, searching for such positions on Craigslist is probably the bane of your existence. Those jobs can get you cash quick, but do they ever lead to anything substantial or long-term?

Initially founded as a staffing service for the aerospace and defense industries, Aerotek.com has become a great resource for anyone looking to find a lucrative position in a hands-on field. While it's not one of those cut-and-dry "here's a search bar" kind of job search sites, necessarily, once you dig into all of the categories you can pretty much find any form of niche position in the engineering or industrial work industries.

It definitely beats getting paid $65 cash for a long day of tarring a roof for some random you met through Craigslist!

An alternative to Craigslist, though still primarily good for one-offs, is to build up a profile and client base on Handy.com and TaskRabbit.com. Build a profile that's specific to what you want to do (and are good at!), take on a few jobs for less money than you'd like at first, and then as you build a background and set of stellar reviews you can raise your hourly rate. Some Rabbits make a full-time salary building IKEA furniture, or doing meal prep for carb-counters, and any number of other chores. What starts as some extra money on the side can turn into 40 hours a week — if you want it to.

Get out!

When things are getting stale in your life and the last thing you want to do is go to another deadend interview, don't be afraid to REALLY shake things up.

Some people have that one friend who spent a couple years galavanting the world, working totally obscure jobs along the way, not worrying at all about where they'd land next (let alone when the next nor'easter would hit). "That could never be me," you think in response, as you hate-tap your way through their Instagram feed while contemplating how much rent you pay for a place you've grown to despise.

GreenheartTravel.org is a job search site that helps you find teaching and volunteer work in different countries around the world. Whether it means being a summer camp counselor in Italy, teaching English in Columbia, or getting a marketing internship in Thailand — Greenheart's like the travel agent connecting you with your dream working vacation.

Jets almost certainly eyeing QB in NFL Draft following Colts trade

The Jets shipped a boatload of picks to Indy this past weekend, so what is their plan exactly?

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The New York Jets clearly stated their intentions on Saturday, sending their No. 6 overall pick and two second-round picks in this year's draft, along with a 2019 second-rounder, to the Indianapolis Colts for the No. 3 pick this April.

It's a steep price to pay considering those second-round picks to sweeten the deal of taking No. 6 could yield starting-caliber talents in the NFL. But the reward could very well be a franchise quarterback, a foreign concept to many Jets fans who were not around for the days of Joe Namath.

Taking a passer seems to be the overwhelming consensus of what the Jets will do.

While they signed Teddy Bridgewater and brought back Josh McCown, both quarterbacks will be on one-year deals. For Bridgewater, it's because of the uncertainty surrounding his durability and pending re-acclimation to starting after missing most of the past two years due to a dislocated knee.

The 38-year-old McCown is simply a stopgap should Bridgewater run into issues under center in New York.

If there was a time for the Jets to take a chance at drafting a franchise quarterback, it's this year.

The 2018 draft class is fairly deep when it comes to first-round prospects. As it stands, Metro has slated five quarterbacks going in the opening 32 picks in USC's Sam Darnold, UCLA's Josh Rosen, Wyoming's Josh Allen, Oklahoma's Baker Mayfield and Louisville's Lamar Jackson. Darnold, Rosen and Allen are considered the top three options and could likely go in the top 10.

New York's decision to trade up though clearly shows that they have a certain quarterback in mind, though it is unclear who that passer is at the moment.

Given this organization's track record though of being snakebitten over the past five decades, it might not work out.

Since 1967, the Jets have traded into the top-five of an NFL draft three times before Saturday's transaction. The three players selected produced zero Pro Bowl appearances (Mark Sanchez, Dewayne Robertson, Johnny "Lam" Jones).

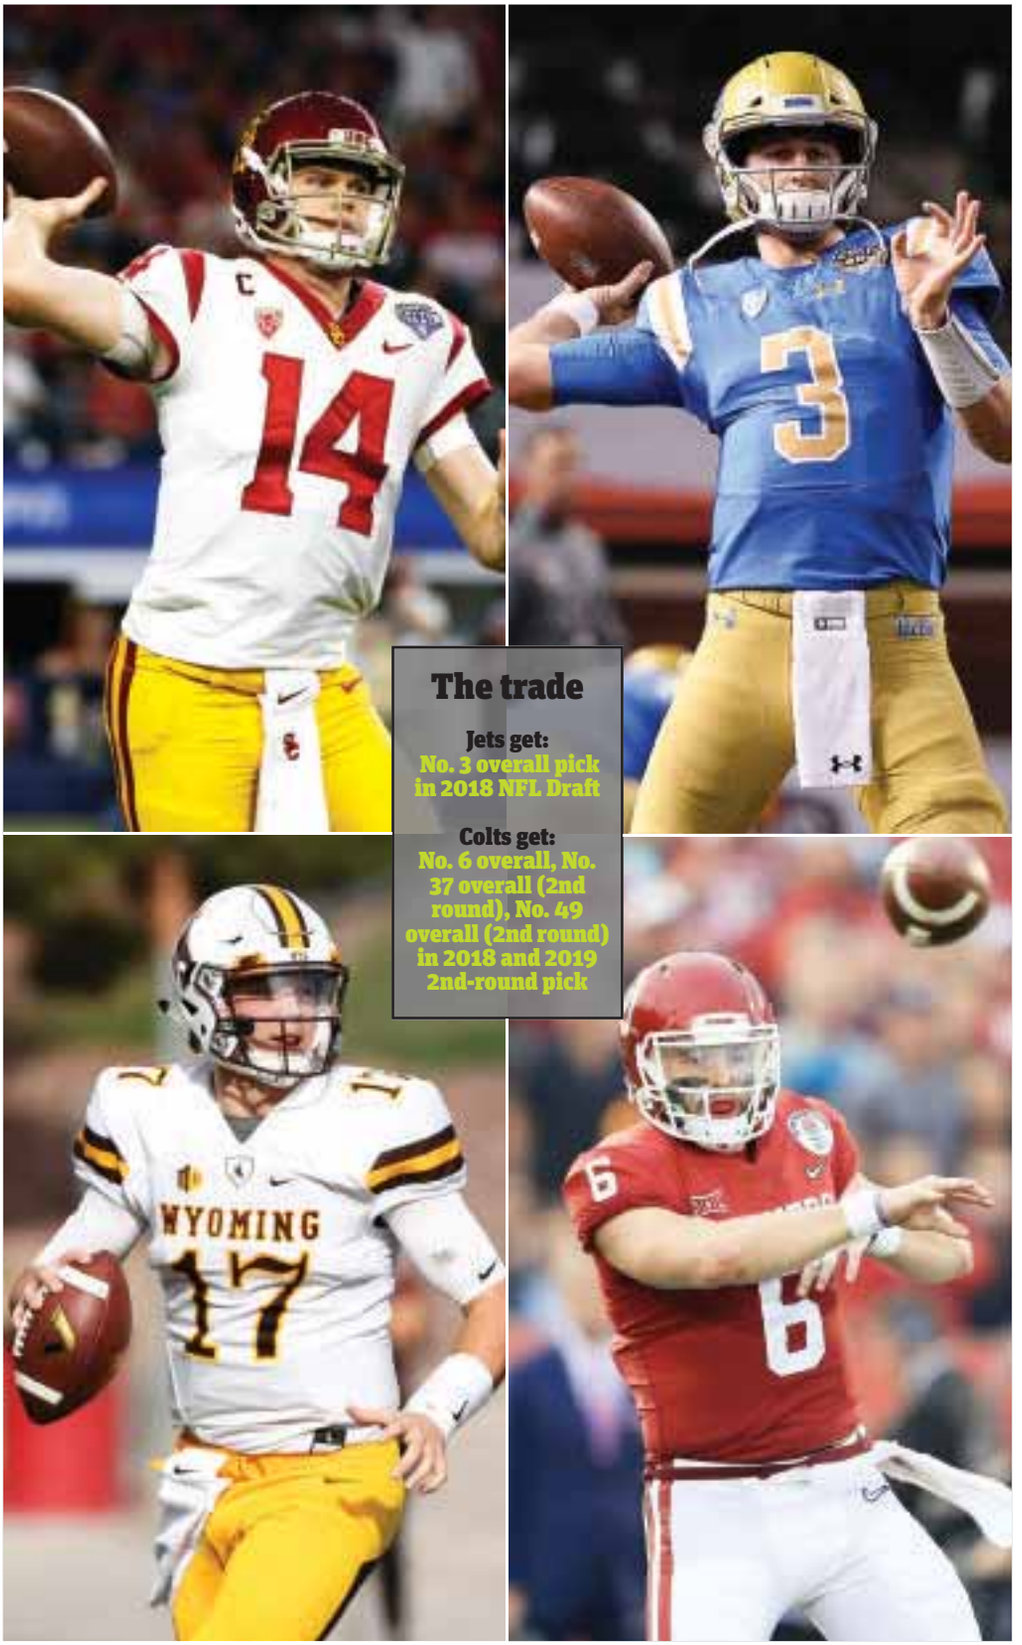
For much more on the Jets offseason, visit: metro.us

There is also a chance the New York Giants, picking at No. 2, deal away their selection to a quarterback-desperate team.

One such team looming is the Jets' division-rival Buffalo Bills, who dealt away Tyrod Taylor to the Cleveland Browns. They currently have the No. 12 and 22 picks to help sweeten the deal for the Giants.

However, the Giants' desire to move that pick could hinge on the availability of Penn State running back Saquon Barkley, considered the top talent in the draft.

Should the Browns nab Barkley, who the Giants are very high on, the likelihood of the No. 2 pick being swapped increases. Thus increasing the Jets chances of losing out on their quarterback of choice and possibly adding another dubious moment in the franchise's string of bad luck.



The trade

Jets get:
No. 3 overall pick in 2018 NFL Draft

Colts get:
No. 6 overall, No. 37 overall (2nd round), No. 49 overall (2nd round) in 2018 and 2019 2nd-round pick

Trout, Harper favorites to win MLB MVP

While the weather on the East coast isn't necessarily reflecting it, Major League Baseball and spring are right around the corner as Opening Day is less than two weeks away.

As rosters around the league are being finalized and work in spring training gets more intensive, the predictions and odds for the 2018 season are starting to surface.

On Friday, Bovada released its odds for American and National League MVP Awards and it's a pair of outfielders leading the way.

In the National League, Washington Nationals right fielder Bryce Harper is the early favorite with 3/1 odds.

The five-time All-Star is coming off what was arguably his second-best season in the majors, batting .319 with 29 home runs and 87 RBI. Only his 2015 MVP campaign eclipsed his 2017 outfit when he slashed .330/42/99.

Chicago Cubs star Kris Bryant, who won the 2016 MVP is second with 4/1 odds.

Bryce Harper will again be a favorite to win some hardware in 2018. GETTY IMAGES

In the American League, Los Angeles Angels center fielder Mike Trout is tabbed to win his third-career MVP Award.

Only nine players in MLB history have three or more MVP Awards and eight of them are in the Hall of Fame:

-Barry Bonds (7 wins)
-Stan Musial (3 wins)
-Albert Pujols (3 wins)
-Mickey Mantle (3 wins)
-Alex Rodriguez (3 wins)
-Mike Schmidt (3 wins)
-Jimmie Foxx (3 wins)
-Yogi Berra (3 wins)
-Roy Campanella (3 wins)

Trout missed out on the MVP Award last year to Houston Astros second baseman Jose Altuve, who capped off a dream year of winning his franchise's first World Series title with this award. He has the second-best odds at 6/1.

Last year's National League MVP, Giancarlo Stanton, is also in the running for the American League title with his new team, the New York Yankees. He is tied for the third-best odds at 12/1 with his teammate Aaron Judge right behind him at 18/1. JOE PANTORNO

Aries Making a financial gain or negotiating a deal is featured. Step up and wheel and deal. If you leave this task to someone else, you won't do as well.

Taurus Share your feelings with someone you love and respect. A joint effort will help you hash out all your problems, and although it won't be easy, the results will be worthwhile.

Gemini A legal or financial dispute should be handled carefully. Anger is never a good way to deal with controversy if you want to move forward. Look for an appropriate solution.

Cancer Get involved in projects that will help you advance. Revamping your resume or exploring new ways to use your skills will encourage you to take on a new position

Leo Discuss what you want to see happen and get the go-ahead. If you are open to suggestions, it will help you bring about changes that will encourage saving.

Virgo You may have a good plan, but don't expect things to run smoothly when it comes to settlements, joint finances or issues that affect your health. Have a good excuse ready.

Libra You'll be drawn to someone who requires assistance. What you get in return will be a lesson or experience that will serve you well when you deal with future relationships.

Scorpio Old habits are hard to break. Look at the mistakes you've made and the people who have been bad influences or have taken advantage of you, and alter your course.

Sagittarius Someone close to you will take advantage of your generosity and good nature. Offer nothing more than affection. Make positive personal changes.

Capricorn Getting together with an old friend will do you good and give you something to think about. Be proud of your accomplishments instead of envying others.

Aquarius Take up a creative hobby or show a greater interest in different cultures, lifestyles or beliefs. What you learn will encourage you to improve your own life.

Pisces Getting angry will not help solve a problem. Address matters head-on, and if you must step down or make a move, you'll end up further ahead when you do so. EUGENIA LAST
